

IOS Lister's Corner 2008

Total Counties per Species List

(Top five totals per county - 102 possible counties)

The year 2008 had significant flooding and Walters perceived it would create significant habitat for shorebirds, so he gave up spring warbler hunting for pond and levee shorebird searching. The result yielded quite a haul for many of the uncommon shorebirds. Looking at family groups, he now leads most of the shorebird, waterfowl and sparrow species. Chapman is holding down the raptors and warblers, while Richmond appears to be specializing in the gulls.

With the updated submissions from some long-term active listers, along with the first time submissions of Baum and Kassebaum, this list has really matured into an amazing document. It is starting to provide quite a comprehensive view of the species distribution possibilities for Illinois. One interesting species tally is Kassebaum's Tricolored Herons found in eight counties. The next highest lister is just two, which is what most birders would think is a great tally. But his higher tally shows that birders could discover this species more often than formerly thought.

It appears one could even do some basic species distribution status comparisons with these tallies. For example, adding the top five lister's counties for each ibis species, one could conclude that the White-faced has become the most common of the three species. A decade ago, most birders would have thought Glossy was the most regular ibis. Perhaps this report is detecting an early pattern of increasing range growth into Illinois for the White-faced Ibis, which, if true, means that birders should be on the lookout for it this spring.
